Asks: If you were out in public and saw an individual with a suspicious skin lesion, would you address it?

"I think it depends. If I thought the spot was potentially life threatening to that person, I think it's worth talking to that person and mentioning it. Whether they like it or not, I think it's worth trying. If it's something that I don't think is potentially life threatening, I probably wouldn't mention it to that person who I think might take offense at me trying to tell them something or help them."

— Lawrence Green, MD

As part of our coverage of the American Academy of Dermatology Annual Meeting, Neal Bhatia, MD offers pearls for using antibiotics safely and effectively for acne. He says that as the highest prescribing specialty of antibiotics, dermatologists must be aware of potential consequences and develop best practices for prescribing in combination with topicals.
